AMELIA EARHART, A PILOT OF COURAGE AND SKILL

Hope has now sadly been officially abandoned that Amelia Earhart can have survived her last adventurous flight, after being missing for over a fortnight. Miss Earhart left Miami, Florida, on June 1st to fly round the world from west to east, with Fred Noonan as navigator. Her machine was a Lockheed Electra. She arrived at Dumdum aerodrome, Calcutta, on June 17th, having covered more than half her journey. From there she flew to the Australian port of Darwin, arriving in the early hours of June 28th. Three days later, Miss Earhart took-off for Howland Island which was the most hazardous part of her itinerary. Although Mayday signals for help are reported to have been received from her, she has never been seen again and prolonged searches by sea and air have failed to discover any traces of her or her plane.

Amelia Earhart was born in Kansas on July 24, 1898. During the War she served with the Canadian Red Cross, and afterwards studied at Columbia University. She then learnt to fly, but her occupation in life was social welfare work among children in Boston.

Miss Earhart was 30 years old when she first crossed the Atlantic by air. Mrs Amy Guest, wife of the former Secretary of State for Air, financed the flight to the tune of £8,000, and had originally intended to fly in the plane herself. After much thought she decided to give up her place to Miss Earhart.

The three-engined aircraft was fitted with floats as an extra safety feature and was aptly named 'Friendship'.

Miss Earhart – with her pilot and mechanic - left Newfoundland on 17th June 1928 and 21 hours later touched down in South Wales.

It was not until after her marriage - on February 7, 1931- to George Putnam, of the famous publishing house, that she was able to realize her ambition of flying the Atlantic as a solo pilot, and famously she was to become the first woman to do so. She was quite frank about her feelings. She did not profess that the flight would do any good to anyone. "I did it really for fun," she said, "not to set up any records or anything like that."

This time she chose a fast single-engined aeroplane and on May 20, 1932, she set off from Harbour Grace, Newfoundland. After 13 hours she made landfall in the town of Donegal, in the west of Ireland. Miss Earhart had made the fastest Atlantic crossing to date.

She encountered difficulties with various instruments during her flight, but she was an experienced pilot and doubtless her previous crossing stood her in good stead. When she was still four hours out one section of the engine exhaust began to leak. At the same time she met bad weather and had to begin blind flying, and soon after her altimeter failed her. Amelia Earhart told our Aeronautical reporter that she then climbed up into the clouds until the tachometer froze, "and then I knew I couldn't be near the sea." She thought she went up to 12,000ft., but ice began to form on the wings and the clouds were still heavy above her. Meanwhile the intense heat around the leaking exhaust began to burn away the metal. She looked over at it and wished she hadn't as she saw flames coming out, and it worried her all night. Other parts began to work loose, the plane began to shake and the engine 'began to run rough.' Petrol leaked into the cockpit from the petrol gauge, and there was the danger that the fumes should reach the exhaust and explode.

At last she guessed she had made Ireland, but could not be sure, so she turned north until she saw the hills above the mouth of the River Foyle. Following the railway track, she made an almost perfect landing on a farm near Londonderry, and was warmly greeted and entertained by the farmer and his wife.

When Miss Earhart travelled on to London the next day she was met by her adoring, proud husband and a huge crowd of well-wishers.

In the 73 years since Amelia Earhart vanished into thin air, a number of Question 1 have emerged about how and where the famed Question 2 died. According to some researchers, new discoveries on the Pacific island of Nikumaroro may bring us closer than ever before to an answer.

Amelia Earhart's Question 3 round-the-world-flight was cut short when her Lockheed Electra plane disappeared over the Pacific Ocean on June 2, 1937. Within hours, rescue workers began Question 4 the area for signs of the famed aviator and her navigator, Fred Noonan. The U.S. Navy and Coast Guard launched the largest and most expensive air and sea search in American history. When their efforts failed, Earhart's husband of six years, George Putnam, financed his own search but came up equally empty-handed. A living legend had simply Question 5 into thin air.
